QUADRAPHONIC

The Columbia 80 QUADRAPHONIC record is a major advancement in the art of recording. It permits the reproduction of sound from four separate channels when a special 80 decoder is used. The 80 QUADRAPHONIC system employs a new double-helical modulation to encode a four-channel master recording so the four tracks can be carried in a stereo format on a disc. The disc, when played back through an 80 QUADRAPHONIC decoder, will display the original four channels through the four speakers in the listening area. The all-around you presence of sound coupled with the ability to move elements of the program between any pair of speakers allows the utmost flexibility to artists, composers, and arrangers, and is passed on to the listener as a totally new experience. The Columbia 80 QUADRAPHONIC record conforms to the standard RIAA Equalization Curve. The Columbia 80 QUADRAPHONIC record has the full dynamic range of the stereo LP disc and may be played through any existing stereo system with optimum results.
